Wall Street Institute offers free English courses to ELC students

Hong Kong, 27th September 2007 – In light of the importance of English language skills for students to achieve their personal goals, Wall Street Institute (WSI), the largest specialist English language institution in the world, announced today to offer free English courses to all current students of English Language College (ELC).

Chris Arscott, CEO of Wall Street Institute, said, 'We understand many ELC students are concerned because they cannot complete their studies at ELC. We feel that it is our duty to serve and take care of the English learning community in Hong Kong, therefore we are offering free tuition to all current ELC students. We are confident that the students are going to enjoy studying at WSI and they may choose to continue staying with us to further their studies.'

From now till November 30, 2007, ELC students may come to any of WSI's 6 centres and study free of any tuition charges. Students must bring a valid receipt showing at least 1 month remaining study and a valid student ID. The entire remaining period of study will be honoured by WSI. This offer is only available to ELC students at the age of 16 or above, and HK$500 is needed for administration and teaching materials.

All 6 centres of WSI have been registered with the Education Bureau (EDB). As the founder and member of Hong Kong Federation of Private Educators, and the only English teaching institute that received ISO9001:2000 international accreditation in Hong Kong, WSI has always been providing premium English courses for the community.

With 35 years of professional experience in English teaching, WSI has been providing 100% result guaranteed premium English courses to English learners in 27 countries. WSI bases its unique MultiMethod® on the natural way of acquiring languages, combined with an interactive learning system, small group classes, conversational classes and various student outings. WSI makes learning English no different than acquiring a mother tongue. Studying at WSI is the easiest and fastest way to speak English with confidence.
